Interrelationship of Buildings and Surroundings

The building is one of the many early houses that line Danbury Road.

Other Notable Features or Buildings on the Site

The central chimney, five-bay, Colonial dwelling has been extensively reworked in the Colonial Revival style beginning in the 1920s. It is known that there were late-19th century, “improvements” made to the house, but they were removed this century. Nine-over-nine sash are used throughout and are coupled on the gable ends. The barge board and eave detail appear to be 20th century. The house has been extended to the rear with a two-story wing of corresponding design in this century. An apartment was located in the rear ell. The house was apparently originally constructed as a two-room, up-and-down dwelling which was later extended by a kitchen ell across the back. The framing is original, but most of the interior paneling was added by the current owner in the 1960s.

Historical and Architectural Importance
Since the house has been extensively reworked in the Colonial Revival style, it is not possible to assign an accurate date of construction. It is 18th century, but a curious entry in the 1782 inventory of Elias Betts, the son of James Betts who is reputed to have built the house ca. 1730 refers to “21 acres on which an old house stands.” It was common for ancient houses to be replaced by newer dwellings, or be completely reworked in a more commodious form, so it is quite possible that the present dwelling was erected by Isaiah and Elisha Betts who inherited the property from their father’s estate in 1785. In 1833 the house passed out of the Betts family to Ezekiel Sturges. It descended through the Sturges family, passing from Ezekiel to his daughter Catherine and then to her niece Sarah Davenport. The house was reworked in the Victorian-era, picturesque mode, but all of the late-19th century “improvements” were removed by the host of owners who succeeded Mrs. Davenport after 1910. The practice of striping an 18th century house of all evidence of 19th century additions and returning the structure to an idealized and comfortable interpretation of the 18th century was common in Wilton, and in fact all of New England in the post-World War I era. The house, which stood on a 72-acre parcel was sold to Edward Oakland in 1920, Edward Godfrey in 1927, Henry Mountain in 1928, and Victor Hammer in 1954 (31:104, 38:342, 37:422, 66:62). Much of the work on the house was done by Victor Hammer’s daughter Nancy Tafel who occupied the house her father owned. Dana Blackmar purchased the house in 1965 and he, like the Mountains, used it as both a residence and antique shop. Mr. Dana added the interior paneling, fireplace in the north chamber on the second level, and in general made the house more authentically colonial in appearance. The house has been extended to the rear at least twice. The first wing was added about 1954 by the Hammers and Tafels. The guest house was also rehabilitated in 1954.
